INDIANS LAMENT

2.

Gone, gone, and countless mounds
 Tell where my natives sleep;
 Gone, gone, and the wild deer bounds,
 Over each mouldering heap;
 The tomahawk rusts in the forest shade,
 Cold with the damp that years have made,
 And marks the spot of their ambuscade,
 Who are gone— all gone.

3.

Gone, gone, for the white man's ire
 Swept like a tempest by;
 Gone, gone, through a sea of fire,
 Of tears and of agony;
 The smouldering cot of the foe at night,
 Is no more seen like a beacon light,
 To cheer them on through the bloody fight,
 They are gone— all gone.

Gone, gone, and I alone
 Mourn for the vanquished brave;
 Gone, gone, like an arrow flown,
 Or a waif upon the wave;
 Pleasant now are their hunting grounds;
 Dried are their tears—and healed their wounds,
 While my ears drink in but the mournful sounds,
 They are gone— all gone.
